Wisconsin Railway Difficulties.

CHICAGO, June 1.—It is understood that the [illegible] of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad are about commencing suit in chancery in one of the Wisconsin districts (probably in the United States Circuit Court, before Judge Drummond) to enjoin and prohibit further proceedings against their railroad or any of its agents, under the so-called Potter Railroad Act of the last Wisconsin Legislature. Suit is brought by the Northwestern Co. because they are an alien company and can sue in United States courts, which the St. Paul Co., being a State corporation, cannot do. The injunction asked for will be for the purpose of restraining and prohibiting a great deal of litigation and other oppressive proceedings which are being inaugurated against the company.

THE TERRITORIES.

Wool is being shipped in considerable quantities from this way.

Quite a cutting affray, in which a citizen of Lewiston was pretty badly used up, occurred at Lapwai last week.

Several pack trains numbering in the aggregate 342 animals and carrying 62 tons of freight, left Lewiston last week for the mining camps east of that place.

Some time ago Wm. Caldwell, on Lapwai creek, was ordered to give up his farm as an Indian Reservation was located on it, and now he has been forbidden to remove the growing crops.

James Anderson, while mining in his claim on [illegible] Creek, Idaho, met with a very painful accident, caused by a bank of earth falling upon him. One of his legs was broken in two places.

A gentleman who came from Victoria to [illegible] reports that several cases of small pox exist in that city. The parties came from San Francisco on the Prince Alfred. We hope the report may prove unfounded.

The Salt Lake Tribune says: "One of the rules of the Order of Enoch is that all girls on reaching the age of 14, must get married. There is no deviation from this and the first offer, no matter how many wives the man may have, or how ugly he may be, the girl must accept his hand."

The Tacoma Tribune says: "The U. S. brig [illegible] has gone below to spend the remainder of the season, and finish up old work in the central part of the Sound. Next year it has been decided to do the town and harbor of Seattle, as Olympia has been surveyed during the last eighteen months."

Messrs. Schwabacher Bros. & Co., of Seattle, received last week a consignment of thirty two ounces of gold from the Sultan River gold diggings, worth $16.75 an ounce. These mines are about seventy miles north east of Seattle on a [illegible] of the Snohomish. The country has not been very thoroughly prospected. There may be good diggings farther up in the mountains.

Arrangements are about being perfected for the shipment from Tacoma of a thousand tons of coal from the Skookum Chuck mine, for the San Francisco market. A force is now engaged getting out the coal and timber. [illegible] will be made in the upper town for its reception and shipment. It is expected that this first cargo will demonstrate the superior advantage of that harbor and railroad for the shipment of coal from that mine.

The Walla Walla Spirit of May 29th says: "Never did rain come more opportunely in this valley than did that of a few days past. The rain was quite general and sufficient to help on the crops wonderfully. Last week we noticed the fact that, unless rain should come, our crops this year would be much below the average. It is now assured that the danger of such a state of affairs has gone by. The crops in our valley this season will not suffer, and our farmers will raise an abundance as usual."

Capt. Campbell, who was one of the party who came up from San Francisco to examine the Cedar Mountain coal field near Seattle, was robbed of some $120 last Wednesday night of last week at the Occidental Hotel in Seattle. The night following two gentlemen sleeping in the United States Hotel in the same place were also relieved of small sums of money. The doors were locked and the keys left in the doors on the inside, in both these cases. From marks on the ends of the keys it seemed evident that they had been turned by nippers from the outside.

The Tacoma Tribune learns that measures are about being consummated for the commencement of ship building at Tacoma on a scale of considerable magnitude. Several well known gentlemen of ample capital are interested in the enterprise and one or two practical ship builders will probably be associated with them. Should the design be carried forward as now contemplated we cannot question the success of the undertaking. Puget Sound affords facilities for this industry superior to any part of the globe and no point on the Sound is better adapted to it than Tacoma.

SAN DIEGO, June 1.—Sheriff Hunsaker, who has been untiring in his efforts to work up the Overend case and bring the guilty parties to justice, returned last evening, having scoured the country thoroughly without success until he came to Marshal Grable's, where Mr. Sargent was working a number of Indians. The captain of the squad gave a satisfactory account of all his men at the time of the Overend murder but one, whose movements he had no record of, and who was then away from the squad. The Sheriff learning of his whereabouts arrested him. Upon questioning him as to his whereabouts at the time of the murder, he pretended he could understand neither English nor Spanish, became confused and attempted to escape, but after a long race he came upon the Indian, who made signs to surrender. This occurred at the edge of a precipice. While the Sheriff was dismounting to handcuff the Indian he again darted off, leaping down the precipice, and disappeared in the brush. Hunsaker followed on foot, the ground being too rough to ride over, but was finally obliged to abandon the pursuit. Two of his posse, Chas. Tribollet and Blanco, were left on the ground, having arrived shortly after, and there is little doubt but they will get him, provided he is not rescued by his band. Mr. Sargent arrived in town this evening and says the Indian's name is Sordo; that shortly after Sheriff Hunsaker left the grade the Indians all quit work and have not returned. There is every reason to believe that the murder was committed by parties belonging to this band. Overend had considerable money in his house, and had been the topic of conversation among them for some time. Blanco informed the Sheriff that Sordo and another Indian named Acuna were parties who murdered a man named Johnson in this county four years ago, the perpetrators of which have never been discovered. Another incident against Sordo in connection with the Overend murder is that he and his companion left the place on the evening of the murder and returned early the following morning, their horses showing evidence of hard riding. Upon being questioned they denied having been away. Deputy Sheriff Miller started this evening to join Tribollet and Blanco.

THE RESERVOIR HORROR.

FURTHER DETAILS OF THE CATASTROPHE IN MILL RIVER VALLEY—DESCRIPTION OF THE RESERVOIR AND THE INUNDATED TOWNS AND VILLAGES—HOW THE [illegible] SWEPT DOWN THE DOOMED VALLEY—NEARLY TWO HUNDRED LIVES LOST AND MILLIONS OF PROPERTY DESTROYED—HISTORY OF THE [illegible] AND DESIGN OF THE WORK [illegible].

The following accounts of the terrible catastrophe which occurred in Massachusetts on Saturday, are partly from the special dispatches and correspondence of the New York dailies, partly from our own dispatches from the scene of the calamity and partly from the Springfield papers of the day. The whole embodies a comprehensive and accurate history of the disaster.

A twenty-four [illegible] in the limit of the reservoir above Williamsburg [illegible] had been leaking for weeks and some people had shaken their heads [illegible] but little attention [illegible] to it until the break. It had [illegible] of Saturday morning the masonry around this outlet gave way and then all in a minute a great wall of water seemed to spring up into the air and leap out into the valley below. The standing joke of the Mill river valley—"Look out, the dam is broken"—was proved no joke at last. The torrent was upon Williamsburg in ten minutes and sent its spray above the sixty feet high. It crushed one house like paper and killed a woman and her two children, then another and another, then swept away the woolen mills and rushed on at the rate of twenty miles an hour. As it came raging down the valley it swallowed up houses in an instant, leaving no trace. Tree butts and great stones came down with the flood. The mountain of water, roaring like a thunder storm of hail, reached Skinnerville and lifted the silk mills upon its shoulders before shredding them into bits. At Haydenville it swept away the factory in a moment. At Leeds it came down a wall of water faced by an abattis of timbers, trees and iron boilers, which struck the village in full front.

There was an hour and a half of flood and then ebb, and at noon those who had escaped came back in crowds to see the ruin. It is an awful sight. Houses are twisted like crumpled paper, trees stripped of their bark and limbs even when their roots have clung to the soil. The beautiful valley is a waste of mud and muddy water laden with distorted and strange shapes. Great boilers have been carried hundreds of yards and left crushed together and buried. A man was picked up from a tree upon which he had ridden six miles on the torrent, cheering and waving his coat. The poor fellow's mind was gone. Everything was ground fine. When the flood was past the timber were in toothpicks and scraps of iron, bricks, great stones newly become boulders, and here and there a corpse or a piece of a corpse. All the windings of the valley were filled with the debris—a terrible picture of waste and death in the most beautiful valley of Massachusetts.

The gracious work of saving the dead from this burial began at noon. At Skinnerville the first bodies were picked up, dug out from the mud or taken with difficulty from overloaded ruins. All through the valley the work went on till night, and then men with lanterns seeking their dead stood guard. At Haydenville forty bodies were gathered by night and at Leeds forty five. There had been in the afternoon gangs of plunderers, promptly turned to workers by no stinted threats; the people were ready to brain them with the first stone. There were fewer dead at Florence and Northampton (one hundred and forty in all), and many more are certainly buried in the mud and rubbish that fill the valley with black heaps from Williamsburg to Northampton. A man on horseback gave warning through the upper half of the valley, but some would not hear, and some turned to their houses and to the great factories for safety. One man at Haydenville factory saved his life by sticking to the house, but he was a marvelous exception. He ran into a closet that stood against the great chimney of the factory, and when the factory was crushed the chimney stood, and the closet stuck to it like a lantern against a wall, with him waving his arms for help out of a breach he made in its walls. But a man and a girl who ran out at the roar of the waters to run back for a haven of safety went down under the building. At Williamsburg a factory and twenty seven houses were blotted out; at Haydenville a factory, a gas house, a cotton mill, a bank and 100 dwellings; at Leeds a button factory and twenty five buildings; at Skinnerville every house is gone except Mr. Skinner's own. Such houses as are here set down as gone are utterly vanished and distributed in shreds—not a piece over six feet long—over miles of country. To attempt to estimate the money loss would be folly now. It will be counted in tens of millions, and the whole valley will be a house of mourning to-morrow. The [illegible] river is, as it has been seen, now a trickling stream in ten miles of mud. The lake hemmed in by defective masonry up among the Goshen hills has done its work terribly.

The break came very suddenly and almost before the inhabitants of the inundated villages had partaken of their morning meal, and in some instances before they had awakened from the slumber of the night before. The morning was dark and cloudy, as if in keeping with the melancholy event, and the operatives in the various mills along the line of the stream were generally wending their way to their daily toil. It was not far from 7 o'clock when the first symptoms of the break were discovered by the watchman in charge of the dam. These consisted of a small leak through the lower embankment in the direction of Williamsburg. At first the watchman thought little or nothing of the circumstance, but at length the gap began to widen and he very properly became alarmed and hastened to notify the inhabitants in the villages below. He started on a run for Williamsburg, which was less than two miles distant, but long before he had got there the whole embankment gave way, and the stream of terror [illegible] him. He had to take to a neighboring hill to save his own life, and [illegible] time in going [illegible] which he had to call [illegible] humble [illegible].

The rush of the waters and the terror and consternation which ensued among the [illegible] citizens was most heart-rending to witness. The flood came without the slightest warning save a heavy rumbling noise like thunder, or the sound of a heavy train passing over a railroad bridge. Almost in an instant the current swept [illegible] through the villages of Skinnerville, Williamsburg, Haydenville and Leeds, the three first named hamlets lying about three quarters of a mile apart, and the latter [illegible] Haydenville. To those who saw the torrent approaching it looked as if a terrible fire was sweeping across the country. The spray [illegible] the appearance of heavy black smoke, and the deception was complete; in the village of Haydenville the firebells were ringing for a few minutes before the torrent reached the town. The loss to the manufacturing interests in the vicinity may be safely [illegible]. The [illegible] of the manufacturers will probably never be replaced. In fact all of the villages mentioned may be said to be literally destroyed. All the large factories and very many small ones are completely wiped out of existence. The work of destruction is [illegible] as though a second Chicago or Boston fire had swept over the territory. Large brick and stone mills crumbled like so many piles of sand, and small wooden dwellings were [illegible] the raging current [illegible] the surging waters of Mill river.

The [illegible] was terrible and frightful, and made even the strongest men go frantic with fear. Women fainted in the streets and were borne away by the relentless current. So sudden was the inundation that many lost their presence of mind and rushed wildly from points of safety into very death itself. Others who managed to save loved ones were themselves lost. One painful case was that of Dr. F. S. Johnson, of Williamsburg, who seized his two children and in company with his wife started for a high prominence [illegible] of the village. He [illegible] the flood [illegible] his wife from him [illegible] rather than [illegible] she only lived. There are numerous cases where whole families were swept away, as will be seen by the partial list of casualties which is appended to this account.

[illegible]

The Springfield Republican gives the following account of the break and the flight of the waters:

A little below the reservoir on the western bank, but out of range of the flood, stands a small, humble looking dwelling in which lives the gatekeeper. This is George Cheney, a man of about [illegible], apparently an honest and well meaning individual of little education and ordinary intelligence. He has held the position nearly three years. His duty is to attend to the opening and shutting of the gates, keep a watch of the condition of the reservoir, and report if he ever saw anything which seemed to demand attention.

It has been his practice upon rising in the morning to go out and inspect the condition of affairs. He went out as usual Saturday morning about 6 o'clock. Everything looked all right; the reservoir was full, as it had been for several days; water was flowing out the waste-way on the west side past his house—the gate having been closed a fortnight—there was no sign of the impending catastrophe, and Cheney returned to his house. The family, including his wife, several children and his father, sat down to breakfast. They were just finishing the meal when a great noise was heard, and the old man, who was standing at one of the eastern windows, exclaimed, "For God's sake, George, look there."

About forty feet in length of the bottom of the reservoir on the east side, just beyond the gate, was shooting down stream. Cheney seemed to have realized the situation and the emergency at once. With a single eye to the discharge of his duty, and almost, one would infer from hearing him tell the story, without stopping to consider the danger involved, he ran headlong down to the gate and let on the water full head, in the hope that this might possibly afford relief and avert the threatening danger. This done, he paused a moment to investigate the condition of the wall where the break had taken place. A glance showed him that it could hardly fail in a few minutes to give way entirely. Streams of water as large as a man's [illegible] were forcing their way through new crevices opening every moment; the wall was constantly crumbling away, and its utter downfall was evidently only a question of minutes.

Cheney rushed up to his house and told his father he was going to the village to warn the people. Together they hurried to the barn a few rods below, and while Cheney was throwing a bridle upon his horse his father cut him a stick. Leaping upon his horse's back and plying vigorously his lash, he rode at topmost speed down the road [illegible] back to Williamsburg, covering the three miles, he thinks, in fifteen minutes. It was then about half past seven o'clock. Driving to the house of Mr. Spelman, who had general charge of the reservoir, he summoned that gentleman from his breakfast table to go at once with him. "The reservoir is going!" It was but the night before that Cheney had been talking with him about the reservoir, and both had agreed that everything looked all right for the summer.

It is not strange, therefore, that Spelman could not at first credit the statement; thought the man a little "scart," and to his startling communication replied, "[illegible] can't be possible." But Cheney quickly told him about the giving way of earth and the streams of water rushing through, and soon convinced him that the danger was most imminent. The first duty was to warn the people further down the stream. Cheney's horse was exhausted, and Spelman directed him to go to the livery stable, where, as in precious moments were lost in convincing the incredulous proprietor that the messenger's story could be true. Finally a horse was made ready and a fresh man got off to notify the dwellers further down the stream.

Of course the onslaught of the water was terrible and grand beyond description; one can only give its results as depicted, but its appalling accompaniments to one the thick commingling mass of water seemed like the heaviest ocean wave, to another the sound was like the tearing of timbers of many buildings, while a third heard it as the heavy, sullen thunder which precedes the summer storm. It was preceded and surrounded by a [illegible] spray or fog, dark and thick as the heaviest smoke, while even so far away as the Hill there was an odor like that emitted by stagnant pools. The wave is generally described as twenty feet high, though in one spot its spray washed the branches from a tree forty feet from the ground.

It would be interesting to follow the front of the flood as it thrusts itself upon different eyes upon the Williamsburg valley, but taking a representative view from the village as given by Rev. John F. Gleason, we must [illegible] to the [illegible] of its progress. [illegible] by the way were sufficiently calm to receive and [illegible] impressions, and the almost unvarying summing up of the matter is: it was so sudden. Mr. Gleason got up from his breakfast table to see the Adams flouring mill sailing before his window, while his neighbor's houses in the valley below were taken up by the water like chips, to crumble like salt; the trees were mown down like grass, huge bowlders were tossed about by the resistless current, while the waves would play angrily awhile with the barn and shop to grind them to chips and splinters.

THE DAMAGE TO THE VILLAGES.

The blow came upon Williamsburg with such abruptness that even the very [illegible] in the terrible struggle with the waters scarce realized its import. They turned out to relieve the survivors [illegible] all Saturday the dead were sent to the town hall [illegible] a meeting was held at the church [illegible] a relief committee [illegible] for burying the dead, relieving the needy, and soliciting funds, all with the highest display of sorrow, but with the [illegible] for the situation as it was.

The search for the bodies was earnestly prosecuted yesterday and with good results, some dozen or more being brought to the hall, making the [illegible] in Williamsburg [illegible] to meet the clergy [illegible] together with the rest.

The effect of the disaster upon the town of Williamsburg was summed up by [illegible] Saturday evening [illegible] the people [illegible] their town. This [illegible] of course is exaggerated, but has a large basis of truth. All in all the damage [illegible] estimated at fully one third of the valuation of a million and a half. The [illegible] of the property was in the Williamsburg [illegible] the meadow land until the water [illegible] estimate. The number thrown out of employment will probably [illegible]. Their wages [illegible] the Adams mill [illegible] mill.

The center of interest at Skinnerville was the silk factory, which had been [illegible] three stories high [illegible] and attached thereto [illegible] buildings. The factory was known as the [illegible] mill. The [illegible] mill was built in 1867 by Mr. Wm. Skinner and employed [illegible] hands. There were [illegible] on hand at the time of the flood [illegible] the market. For the amount [illegible] there was on hand the largest stock of raw silk the mill has ever had.

The warning was given quietly enough, and the operatives at first took the matter as a joke. They had but a brief moment, however, to get out, and all escaped safely to the railroad bank some distance in which nearly all the inhabitants of the tract also succeeded, though some were caught on the way by the water. There they watched the [illegible] wave [illegible] building [illegible] his clasping arms of [illegible] It was [illegible] possible to realize that they had [illegible] all at once swallowed [illegible] leaving Mr. Skinner's house with but a [illegible] of it; either swallowed all the [illegible] of the tenements [illegible] the little hamlet [illegible] these houses [illegible] to Mr. Skinner.

Two small houses [illegible] at Haydenville, the great [illegible] and the extensive and widely known brass works of Hayden, Gere & Co. When the [illegible] warning was received it was in many places [illegible] scarcely a moment passed before the terrible, strange, tumultuous sound of crashing [illegible] timbers mingled with the wash and echo of mighty waters [illegible] all that it was a serious matter.

Besides a large [illegible] of buildings, there was [illegible] on the west bank of the river below the village [illegible] of the Hayden [illegible] company, and their loss was considerable, about $7,000. The gas works of the Hayden Company, from which they supplied the village as well as themselves, which were situated just south of their mill, were utterly destroyed, the brick walls being broken to fragments and the [illegible] crushed to a shapeless mass.

Coming over the dam at an especially narrow part of the river, the flood here presented as marked an aspect as at any point in its course. Lifted between fifteen and twenty feet above the ordinary level of the river, but with no definite and [illegible] surface, a chaos of tossing [illegible] beams and rafters, whole roofs of houses, great bunches of hay, clap boards, fences, trees, an indescribable struggling [illegible] on in [illegible] drove, and seemed to those below who witnessed it the most wonderful and fearful sight they ever beheld.

As it came over the dam one of the houses just [illegible] by the mass of waters struck the old foundry, shoved it into nothingness, and continuing, forced a breach in the side of the great building, and in a moment [illegible] the centre fell in, the ends folded in together, and the solid structure melted away as if it had been builded of snow. There was no [illegible] to the substantial [illegible] for [illegible] tremendous force.

The whole range of Hayden, Gere & Co. buildings were nearly 600 feet in length, including a building at the south end occupied by the office of Hayden, Gere & Co., the Haydenville Savings bank, and [illegible] by the Masonic hall, which was only finished in 1873. This was one of the most elegant of buildings, finished without regard to cost, with marble inland floors, the finest cabinet work of rosewood, mahogany, etc., and probably unexcelled anywhere for a building of such uses.

All that is left of these buildings is a fragment of the north end, which was saved by the tall chimney. The rest is so entirely cleared off that it would be impossible to discover where the building had stood, the massive foundations being rocked [illegible] helter skelter everywhere. The loss in these buildings was enormous and not readily computable. In patterns alone, the accumulated capital as it were of this peculiar business, there are lost no less than $60,000; the bank building when erected cost $30,000, and the whole range of buildings could not probably be replaced and stocked for less than $200,000.

On the east side of the street the houses, many of them large double tenements, were built quite closely together, and all were swept entirely away for more than half the length of the street. So thoroughly obliterated are all traces of the foundations that some of the former occupants are unable to locate their old home, but stand and gaze at the flood swept grounds in utter bewilderment.

At the village of Leeds a terrible loss of life occurred. At first no water was visible, but a wall of drift wood thirty feet high and several hundred feet in width was seen sweeping down the valley at the rate of twenty miles an hour.

THE TOWN [illegible]

Beginning at the upper end of the stream, the first of the villages reached by the flood—Williamsburg—is only four miles from the dam and ten from the mouth of the stream opening into the Connecticut. It is the only one of the three which is not entirely due to a [illegible] factory. Just below its little cluster of houses Mill river, the Conway branch, and Mill Brook, the two short streams, come together. In the flat sandy triangle between the two, the village centre, a church and a few houses are scattered about in large roomy grassy yards. The main life of the village is in the [illegible] of Mill Brook, just before it joins its rival of the larger name and lesser flood. Here the inevitable main street of a New England village spreads out into a broad oblong [illegible] by thirty—the village [illegible] and the village watering trough in the middle, and on one side the stores and the meeting house and Town Hall, the first brick and the others frame. Across them on the long side of the oblong space opposite are half a dozen of the larger houses in the place. Pleasant, quiet country homes, standing between the square and the [illegible] just where the full force of a flood like that which came down the stream yesterday at daybreak would strike and sweep them away. Above these houses the road runs close to the stream, but room enough is still left for yards and houses. For perhaps the fifth of a mile the low banks of the stream are fringed with houses within reach of any sudden rise.

The town is the largest of the three, with a population of [illegible]000 all told, only a small part of whom live in the direct course of the flood. Its postoffice is on the [illegible] just mentioned, [illegible] H. L. James being the Postmaster. The town is the center of Williamsburg township, in which are situated both Skinnerville and Haydenville, Leeds, the third town seriously affected by the disaster, being a part of Northampton township. In Williamsburg proper about 100 houses were on [illegible] Mill river and Mill Brook, the stream running [illegible] from their position and the lowland on which they stood were in all probability swept along by the current. The first of these which were swept away stood just below Williamsburg along Mill river. There [illegible] along the stream: William Thayer's [illegible] factory, employing twenty five men; two button factories, employing together about thirty hands [illegible]. A little further down, a quarter of a mile from Williamsburg, is the Henry James four set woollen mill, standing partly on the sandy [illegible] which runs out into the river and partly on the higher earth bank which stands ten feet above the stream. The hill on the opposite side of the river rises rapidly from the water and gives the current the low ground opposite as its only path. The owner of the mill was in New York at the time of the accident, to start for Europe with his family, but a telegram giving the news of the loss stopped his departure. The mill employs about fifty hands, one of whom has a tenement house on the bank of the stream just below the factory.

About a mile lower down the stream is Haydenville, named after the Lieutenant Governor Joel Hayden, and owned almost entirely by his heirs. [illegible] who work in the mill which make up the main manufacturing interests of the town all live on [illegible] while [illegible] the village [illegible] scarcely any dwellings, except those of the Hayden family. These stand together on the left bank of the stream, from which they are parted by the main road, and on a knoll [illegible] a little height above its bed. The largest of the houses is a huge white pretentious building, with a conservatory in the rear and grounds showily laid out with an abundance of statues and cast iron fountains. By the time the flood reached Haydenville it had been swollen with the mud and debris of the mills above, and the frames and timbers of houses which it tore from their foundations. From the dispatches which indicate its course it seems to have swept through the town a broad current of water 600 to 700 feet wide, and deep enough to toss machinery along the main road of the village, 300 feet from ordinary [illegible] which has now under [illegible] circumstances more than sixty feet wide.

The flood [illegible] the town, struck first the large brass works of Hayden, Gere & Co., [illegible] the country, wrecking them completely. A number of other factories whose exact location cannot be clearly ascertained stand along the banks of Mill river in Haydenville and Leeds. [illegible] above Northampton. The cotton mill of the Hayden Manufacturing Company, 5,000 spindles, employed about seventy five or eighty hands; the Diamond Tobacco Works, employing fifteen or twenty hands; the two extensive silk mills of the Silk Company, employing [illegible] hands in all, and were the well known Unquomonk Silk Mill, owned and operated by William Skinner, Esq., [illegible] in the manufacture of sewing silk and machine twist. A private telegram says that all the houses of his silk operatives, as well as the mill and his own dwelling, have been carried off by the flood.

The large brick mill of the Northampton Brush Company, employing about 60 or 75 hands; the cotton mill of the Greenville Manufacturing Company, [illegible]000 spindles, employing 70 or 80 hands; the Clement & Hawkes Manufacturing Company, agricultural implements, employing 60 hands; the International Screw Company, employing 75 hands, and the large basket factory of the Williams Manufacturing Company, employing about 100 hands; also the Skinner silk mill, employing about 50 or 60 hands. Besides the foregoing there are some half a dozen grist and sawmills, some of them of considerable capacity.

Leeds, the third town which suffered from the flood, is a small place just within the limits of Northampton township, situated like the others in a little bend of the stream, with its houses fringing the low banks on each side. It is a small place with no large factories within its limits and but little business.

Florence, another place affected by the accident, is situated for the most part on high ground overlooking the stream. A few dwelling houses, however, in the southwestern part of the town are grouped along the river banks. Florence is best known by the works of the Florence Sewing Machine Company, which employ several hundred operatives. The valuation of the town of Williamsburg is about $[illegible]; personal, $[illegible]007; real, total, $1,574,181.

THE CAUSE OF THE DISASTER.

It appears that serious doubts as to the safety of the reservoir had been entertained ever since it was built nine years ago, though less the first year or two than in its early history. The gatekeeper has several times expressed fears to his employers, calling special attention to the point where the break occurred, but the examiner always reported everything safe.

The direct cause of the disaster, aside from the general weakness of the dam, must remain the subject of speculation. The gatekeeper detected no sign of danger when he examined the situation at early dawn, and what the last straw was that broke the back of the great reservoir may never be definitely known. Perhaps as satisfactory a theory as any is one advanced by a man familiar with the case, that frosts had started the earth so that the water had found numerous little courses through it, which finally carried off the first mass of earth Saturday morning, and at once precipitated the catastrophe. The gatekeeper has at various times feared a break from the fact that a stream of water flowed constantly through the bottom of the gateway, while there were also a number of small streams, some of them quite minute, along the bottom on either side of the center. Of the whole extent of the reservoir as it stood Saturday morning, not one sixth now remains. The feature that most impresses one about the ruins is the smallness of the stone wall when compared with the immense extent of water which the reservoir held. This wall was understood to be eight feet thick at the base. Upon measuring a section of it as it stood intact some ten feet above the bed of the stream, it was found to lack about three inches of being six feet across.

George Cheney, watchman in charge, stated to the reporter of the Republican that he examined the dam early in the morning and found everything apparently secure, returned home and had just sat down to breakfast with his family when the crash came. He saw forty feet in length of the embankment moving bodily from its place. The remainder crumbled rapidly under the action of the water, and he mounted a horse and rode to warn the villagers along the course of the stream.

SCENES AND INCIDENTS AFTER THE FLOOD.

A reporter of the Springfield Republican describes the scene after the flood as follows:—All through the centre nothing remains of the high wall of stone and earth, which rose to a height of forty feet in the bed of the stream, save the stone work running at right angles with the dam at the bottom, which enclosed the gateway in the very bed of the stream. Nothing is left, and where the water now flows harmlessly along its ancient channel not a stone remains from top to bottom.

A small portion of the eastern part of the reservoir and a large section of the western still remain, in all perhaps a sixth of the original extent, broken and jagged on the edges. Below the reservoir the sight is most impressive. The vast mass of water suddenly let loose and dashing down the narrow valley has wrought such devastation as one would not have believed possible without seeing it. The very bed of the stream has been cut in places many feet below its original course, and for a long distance the village is dotted and sometimes covered with huge rocks torn from the wall of the reservoir, while the trees that in many places lined its banks have quite vanished, and those that marked the outer edge of the torrent are all tattered and torn.

No less than eight cases of insanity have followed among those who have lost relatives and friends by this terrible calamity, and three were committed to the asylum in Northampton this afternoon.

At Leeds on Sunday evening there were forty two bodies lying in the village church, and the number was being increased. Some of them were terribly mangled and so utterly disfigured as to defy recognition, except by their clothing or articles found in their pockets.

The head and upper portion of a young girl were found in Williamsburg, and an hour later the limbs were found in Haydenville, a mile and a half below. Several bodies and fragments of bodies were picked up in Northampton, [illegible] miles below the break, and probably more will be recovered between there and Williamsburg to-morrow. Even the countenances of those who were not torn and mangled presented a horrible appearance, indicating a desperate struggle for life.

A [illegible] named Michael Henegan was caught, and with his horse and wagon were all carried along until he managed to get into the top of a tree, and thus escaped.

Thomas [illegible] was carried some two miles floating on one timber until he finally escaped. Ira Dimmick was in like manner carried over half a mile, and Charles Brady, after riding in imminent peril for a mile, escaped to a tree.

Dr. Johnson warned his wife in season to permit her to escape in safety, but in trying to save his three children he was caught by the flood, and they all four perished in sight of an agonized wife and mother. The bodies recovered are terribly mangled, and many of them stripped of every particle of clothing, and but few were identified by friends.

One painful case is that of Doctor E. N. Johnson, of Williamsburg, who seized his two children and in company with his wife started for a high prominence just outside the village. He became exhausted and stopped for a moment to rest. The flood came before he could get away, and all were lost, his wife preferring to share death herself rather than abandon the ones she so dearly loved.

W. H. Adams, whose flouring mill was destroyed, notified his family of the impending danger, and endeavored to reach his mills, but was caught by the flood. His house and family escaped unhurt.

One of the saddest cases was that of Mr. Birmingham's family, father, mother and three daughters, all being swept away together. The family were at breakfast when the water struck their house. Birmingham was Superintendent of the James mill.

Of [illegible] who started from the silk mill at Williamsburg to run across the bridge, only one, Mrs. Harding, escaped. She was caught by the flood but was rescued by men witnessing the accident.

Of a family [illegible] French, the mother, son and three daughters were drowned. The father and three children were saved.

H. H. Tilton, of Williamsburg, carrying his aged mother to a place of safety, was caught, his mother drowned and himself narrowly escaping by clinging to the branches of a tree that withstood the torrent.

J. M. Stephenson and two other men, fearing for the stability of the boarding house, in which they had taken shelter, quitted it and climbed an apple tree. The tree was swept away and the men lost, but the boarding house stood firm.

Another man took refuge on the roof of a house. The house crumbled under him, but he was saved by the roof floating.

John Atkins, foreman of the weaving room of the silk rooms, died in saving the lives of his wife and two children.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE RESERVOIR.

BOSTON, May 21.—Col. H. W. Wilson, of the Legislative Committee which visited the reservoir at Williamsburg, and a prominent civil engineer of this city, made a statement to the Times reporter to-day as to the condition in which he found it. The reservoir covered 124 acres, with an average depth of 24 feet, and was 300 feet above the village of Williamsburg; the volume of water enclosed was 1,000,000,000 gallons. The specifications called for a rubble wall of the best hydraulic lime mortar and suitable stone. It was to be set in a trench dug three feet below the surface, was to be two feet thick on top and of increasing thickness downward. All perishable matter, roots, loam, muck, etc., was to be removed from the filling for 30 feet on each side of the stone wall. The dirt was to be in even layers, well rammed for five feet on each side of the wall, but no provision was made for puddling or restraining the earth. The bottom on which the dam rested was solid blue boulder clay, free from springs. On examination the stone used proved to be boulders and cobbles, hardly any split stone being used. Half the stones used could easily be carried by a stout boy. There is not a inch of hydraulic lime mortar in the portions of the walls remaining. Cement or hydraulic lime may have been used in its construction, but it was mixed with so much loamy dirt, instead of true mortar sand, that the stones can be easily torn asunder and the plaster scraped out with a knife or disintegrated by rubbing between the fingers. For about twenty feet east of the escape pipe the wall was laid in a trench dug in the clay. This portion of the wall is standing a few inches above the bottom of the reservoir, but all traces of the mortar have been swept away from the surface of the stone by the rush of the water. The stones have preserved, however, a large surface of original swamp from the embankment above and adjacent to the wall. Next to this section was about forty feet of wall which may have been laid in the clay, but every vestige is washed away. Then comes the portion of wall now standing, but that was not founded on clay bottom or hardpan. Under the bottom stones of this wall a stick can be thrust into the soft oozy earth. At the bottom of this section of wall, but quite a distance above the bottom of the reservoir, was the spot at which the waters evidently first escaped. This is substantially the location assigned by the reservoir keeper, Cheney, who describes the state of things which must actually have occurred when he says that it appeared that the lower half of the bank was sloughing off in large quantities, as it was borne away by the escaping water. Had this wall been laid in a trench three feet deep, there is no probability that the disaster would have occurred. The earth of which both sides of the embankment was made of diluvial drift, being sand, gravel, and light earth, not easily compacted and containing no solid material. This was the fault of the specifications, not of the contractor, but the sections of the dam wherever exposed show, in the roots and perishable matter exposed, how recklessly shammy was its construction. The dam was also 20 feet narrower at the base than the specifications called for. On the sides of the embankment, brush and trees covered by earth had been filled in, and an attempt at rip-rapping had been made by piling in loose stone, but it was very imperfectly done, and could not possibly be a proper wall.

CANINE SAGACITY.

[Corr. New York Herald.]

Among the multitude of strange and touching events incidental to this calamity is one showing the remarkable sagacity and intelligence of the canine race which is worthy of record. Colonel Hayden, one of the sons of the late Lieutenant Governor Hayden, owns a noble dog of the St. Bernard species. He has for a long time been a village favorite and pet of the school children who were taught near the Hayden residence. He was as punctual at his recesses as the foremost child. The little ones could adorn his tail with fancy ribbons, wind their jumping ropes all around him, and throw him upon the ground a captive, send him to fetch sticks, push him off the bank into the river, harness him up and run the streets with switch in hand, and in fact do almost anything with him, and yet he was their close friend and protector. It is said of him that he had a special liking for little girls, and that one of his greatest favorites was the little Birmingham girl who was swept down and lost with her father, and all her brothers and sisters. A pat from her hand was seemingly enough to repay him for waiting until school was out, when he would almost invariably accompany her home. But the mastiff had another friend in Mr. Eli Bryant, the father of Mrs. Col. Hayden, and a gentleman something over sixty years of age. He was delighted to be with him, uneasy when he was away, and always when he could he would accompany the old gentleman in his walks about the village. Mr. Bryant was among the victims of the disaster, and so were many others of the dog's old friends. It is said that no human being ever expressed a keener sense of the general surrounding sadness than he. His movements even in the bustle and confusion of the occasion were noticeable. He went to the school house, but came almost directly home again. He introduced himself upon the domain of the family and was in every part of the house, snuffing about. An old pair of boots of Mr. Bryant's attracted his repeated attention, as did also several articles of clothing of his lost friend. Sunday afternoon he started out and followed the searchers for bodies on the meadow lands. This afternoon he was seen on Miller's Flats pawing in the sand. His actions finally excited sufficient attention to attract visitors, who found that he had dug quite a trench. In this excavation the cause of the creature's vigorous efforts and his barking was explained. There was disclosed the lower portions of a man's limbs, the toe of his shoes being upturned. They could have hardly been more than half exposed to view when the dog discovered them. The next half hour revealed the form of Mr. Bryant. As the workmen prosecuted their digging around the body, the dog laid down at the feet. Finally, when the face was exposed to view, the poor creature [illegible], but when a cloth was wrapped around the dead form and he removed [illegible], the noble animal seemed bowed with grief, and only sadly he followed the party home. The search had been made for the remains in the exact locality, and it is hardly possible that any human being could have ever found the buried corpse.

A KENTUCKY MURDER.—A Louisville dispatch of May 21 says: A special to the Courier-Journal gives an account of a horrible murder in Frankfort, Ky., to-day. Fred Wolcott, a dissolute young man of that town, came home drunk in the morning, and after some words with his mother struck her with a hatchet, splitting her skull. Wolcott gave himself up and was placed in jail. The murder has caused great excitement.

TUESDAY MORNING JUNE 2, 1874

THE RESULT

The counting of the ballots proceeds so slowly that no reliable reports can be given this morning of the result of the election. What reports we have are from the precincts along the railways where the Republicans have greatest strength and it will be found when the full returns are in that the vote of these points is no index to the vote of the State.

In this county nearly the entire Independent ticket is probably elected by a handsome majority. The city gives the Independents according to the best estimate from the count, so far as it had proceeded before 3 o'clock a. m. about 50 majority—one or two candidates possibly not quite so much—and the vote of the country precincts will raise the majority to 150 or 200.

The Independents have elected their candidates for Supreme Judge and Prosecuting Attorney, by an overwhelming majority. Johnson ran behind his ticket more than anybody had expected.

The Independents are of course jubilant. Multnomah county and the Fourth Judicial District are rescued from ring rule. The people have at last triumphed over the ring, and freed themselves from the tyranny of the Holliday despotism. Let everybody give thanks and take courage.

A VISIT TO THE COUNTRY

Last week we made a brief tour into Yamhill county and were abundantly repaid for doing so in the enjoyment of a look out over the beautiful fields of that delightful region. It may be the effect of early association, but to our eyes there is no more lovely country anywhere than that about McMinnville and immediately to the south and west. Its varied landscapes and its cozy comfortable homes are a joy forever. Just now, the fields of growing grain spread out on every hand impart to the scene an air of thrift and plenty that adds force to the appreciation of its beauty, speaking of golden harvests and suggesting great ships laden with bread for hungry peoples.

McMinnville is growing, not rapidly, but steadily. Since we were last there, four years ago the present month, the village appears to have increased in size and improved in general appearance fifty per cent at least. There is now more business done there than at any point in the county, if we are correctly informed.

A drive of fifteen miles from McMinnville up the south branch of the Yamhill river, through a district of surpassing beauty, brought us to the village of Sheridan. It is a thriving little village, nestling close by the bank of the stream, with the grassy hills just to the rear. Its people are industrious and enterprising, and, having faith in the future of Oregon, are doing their part to build up the State. They are building a handsome academy building 30x60 feet, and two stories high. The lower story is to be used for the time being as a house of worship, and the upper for school purposes, but it is intended ultimately to erect a separate church building on another portion of the same block on which the academy is building. The land is the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, under whose auspices the school is to be.

The farmers in that section devote themselves to some extent to raising fine stock, and we heard it said they could show as handsome animals as could be found in Oregon. All in all, we like Yamhill county a little better than ever, and we always thought it could not be equaled outside the Wallamet valley, or excelled within.

JUSTICE TO DR HENDRIX.

On last Saturday morning there was published in the OREGONIAN an affidavit signed by Mr Wm Cooper in regard to certain charges against Dr J F Hendrix, who is a candidate for some office on the Democratic ticket of Linn county. The Editor of this paper was absent from Portland when the document was received for publication, and did not return until it was published. Had we been at home we should have felt called upon to decline the publication or to make in the same edition the statement which we now propose to make. We do not know what means of knowledge in the premises Mr Cooper may possess, but we are sure he is in error in one important particular, at least. He says that in 1866 a Mr Brown was living with his wife at Canyon City, and that Mrs Brown eloped with Dr Hendrix. This is the substance of his statement so far as it touches this point. This in the main is erroneous. Brown left his wife in the winter of 1865-6 not at Canyon City, but at Susanville, and she stayed at the house of a man named Bradley, at Susanville till the following spring, when she removed to Canyon City. Dr Hendrix was not living with her then nor was her husband. She brought a suit for divorce, which was pending when we left Canyon City in August. We became personally cognizant of these facts through professional consultation as her counsel. Knowing nothing of the facts subsequent to August 1866, we do not pretend to speak of them, but of those prior we speak from recollection. Dr Hendrix was understood to be a personal friend of Mrs Brown but she and her husband had been living apart from each other for many months before she left that country.

We have no relations of friendship with Dr Hendrix, but as this matter was circulated through the OREGONIAN we deem it but simple justice to him that we take the first opportunity to do him justice.

A young lady of Salt Lake City who, like many of her sex, is prone to use cosmetics in beautifying the complexion did a dangerous thing by mistake a few days ago. Mistaking pulverized strychnine for one of the numerous powders in vogue she puffed her face with the devilish drug, which soon penetrated the skin, severely parching the glands of the mouth and throat. Prompt surgical attendance with proper antidotes relieved the sufferer, and at last accounts she was beyond all peril. The accident was caused by using the drug in a dark room.

At the present time efforts are being made to secure subscriptions to the amount of [illegible]000 for the building of the bridge across the Willamette at Salem. W. C. Griswold has the matter in hand and thinks it can be accomplished within a few days.

CITY.

HOW HAS THE COUNTY GONE?

ELECTION DAY IN THE CITY—AN EXCITING AL THOUGH QUIET CONTEST—SCENES AND INCIDENTS—THE RESULT SO FAR AS HEARD FROM

As we write Portland is resting after what has proven the most exciting political contest that has ever taken place in this city. Having as we do but a local view of the situation we can only chronicle but a few of the incidents of election day in Portland. It dawned as usual cloudy and unpleasant with but few indications of a pleasant day. This fact, however, was not to be wondered at, for what would election day be without at least a shower of rain to add its ills were [illegible] to the scene. Several slight showers occurred yesterday insufficient however to dampen in the least the ardor of inspiring politicians or to discourage the zeal of their friends who were laboring in their behalf. The city was astir at an early hour, earlier in fact than usual. It was plain to be seen that some very important event was on the tapis. Judges and clerks of election were hurrying to their respective precincts and active preparations were pushed forward to hasten as much as possible the business of the day and prevent all unnecessary delay. The polls were opened at 8 o'clock and for the first hour or two votes were polled very fast, it being the rule of many to vote early themselves and then work for their respective tickets. Business houses were in most instances closed at 10 o'clock, and merchants devoted the greater portion of the day to labor in the political vineyard. Professional men, mechanics and laborers appeared almost unanimous in their desire to drop work of all kinds, save that of electioneering at the polls. Vehicles of various kinds, ranging from the sorriest looking express and baggage wagons to the nobby hacks and handsomest barouches in the city were soon converted into a means of bringing the names of candidates for office into prominence. Large streamers were displayed upon their sides bearing the name and official position sought after by some eager aspirant for political fame, or what is more probable, the never to be satiated thirst for the almighty dollar. These vehicles, hundreds in number perhaps, were kept busy in carrying any and every one from poll to poll, many of whom no doubt took their annual buggy ride in this way. The drivers were at the beck and call of the general public, and we mistake not in saying that they and the poor animals which, during the heat of the day, were under the lash of perhaps cruel masters breathed freer when at last the polls were closed. The streets were thronged during the day with the male portion of the population and regular habitues of the street corners could but note the almost utter absence of the fair sex. They, with the exception of the "praying league" and a few ladies who were called out on urgent business, perhaps with almost one accord remained at home during the day resolved on allowing fathers, husbands, brothers and sweethearts to fight their own battles, although no doubt many of them were intensely interested in the result. The time, however, has not yet arrived when woman's influence is felt at the polls. Polling places, however, were constantly surrounded by an eager, interested crowd, which, in some instances surged to and fro like a mighty wave as some animated conversation was carried on which, as hopes were entertained by a certain few, would terminate in a knock down and drag out affair. Fortunately, however, disgraceful incidents of this nature were very scarce; in fact, we heard of but two circumstances of this kind and they were of but trivial consequence. Harsh words were occasionally indulged in but they generally proceeded from parties having too heavy a cargo of benzine on board, and hand-to-hand conflicts were prevented by the vigilance of the police force, representatives of which were at every voting place. In fact the quietude of this day astonished very many, as fears were entertained that trouble was brewing as the day progressed. Work, however, was the general programme, and never have we seen more of it done on an occasion of this kind. The Independents, Republicans, Democrats and straight out Temperance men labored manfully in behalf of their favorite tickets. Button holing was more than popular and ticket-scratching more universal still. While many of our citizens remained at the polls all day, others, of course, would simply visit the place, deposit their vote and depart immediately. The hour between 5 and 6 P. M. was perhaps the most exciting one of the day, there being many who make a point of being among the last to vote. Belated suffragists were hurried forward to deposit their ballots. A strict lookout was kept for illegal voters and men were challenged who never were challenged before. Swearing in votes detained proceedings somewhat, but it was considered essential in most cases, and although perhaps the voter would lose his patience, no attention would be paid to his discomfiture as room would be made for his successor in the ranks. There were but few arrests made taking into consideration the excitement attending an event of this kind. As soon as the polls were closed the question of the hour was of course, Any returns from the election, and telegraph and printing offices were crowded with anxious inquirers. Owing however to the "mixed" condition of the tickets considerable delay was occasioned in counting up the vote, and reliable results were very difficult to secure.

UNION TEMPERANCE MEETING.

Ladies and gentlemen gave short speeches and personal adventures in the street and about the polls. One read of the triumph of the anti-license party in California towns. Several parties referred to the good order and unusual quiet about the polls. The hogshead of ice water in Morrison precinct was noticed and its good uses. Temperance men will do well if they continue this good example in time to come. The ladies visited all the polling places. The Crusaders were also busy along the principal streets, and met with no opposition, quiet and good order reigning wherever they went. They reported having visited thirty-three saloons. A gentleman spoke of his quarter million hearers and the success of the cause in his native town and elsewhere in the East. Another adverted to the great efforts made in his native town containing 9,000 inhabitants. A canvass was made by the women resulting in finding only eight women in that town in favor of license, thirty-nine indifferent, and all the rest against license. All felt well satisfied with their day's work, and the hope for better days to come. The Women's Union will conduct the meeting this evening, when they will continue the unfinished matters of last evening. Some news of interest will be given and the varied forms of the work be presented anew.

FOUND DROWNED.—Yesterday evening the [illegible] Beaver brought up the body of a man apparently about forty-five years of age. From the appearance of the body it would indicate that he had been in the water at least five weeks. He wore working clothes and high [illegible] boots. The body was found floating in the river nearly opposite Hunter's and it is presumed that he was a hunter by occupation. On his person was found $4 in money and a pass-book, in which were charges for [illegible]. The body was taken to the undertakers where Coroner Dyer empanneled a jury which gave the following verdict: "We the undersigned Coroner's jury summoned to inquire into the death of a man found dead in the Columbia river on the Washington Territory [illegible] this first day of June, 1874, do find that the deceased came to his death by wounds inflicted by parties to this jury unknown. That deceased's name is to us unknown; that the body was brought to the city by the steamer [illegible] of the Willamette River Transportation Company. John J. Garwood, Foreman; [illegible] Frank Gatens, W. J. Hale, [illegible] H. Cooke."

A TRIBUTE.—The remnant of the [illegible] Band numbering six persons assembled on Decoration Day at the grave of J. F. Dennison, their old leader, who was killed [illegible] the Cascades several years ago by the Bush boys, and strewed flowers over the spot where lies their former comrade. Mr. B. L. Goodwin who was a member of the band made a few pleasing remarks and the East Portland Band played an air suitable to the occasion.

(With his hair parted in the center, and exactly over his scenter)—"I never knew a dozen girls, you know, who could talk sense with a fellow, you know." (With her hair frizzed and frizzled and frowzy and tumbled over her left eye)—"Weally?" Well, the fact is all the girls I know suit their conversation to the party with whom they are talking, you know.

THE FARMERS' EXCURSION TO ASTORIA.

This excursion which has been in contemplation for some time has just closed after four days' enjoyment. The new and favorite steamer Willamette Chief, owned by the Willamette Transportation Company, left Corvallis on Monday morning with thirty passengers. She called at Albany and took on one hundred and ten more, accompanied by the band of that city. The boat got to Salem the same evening, stopped there all night, took on twenty more passengers the next morning, and left at 5 o'clock with one hundred and sixty excursionists, including some of the leading farmers of Linn, Lane, Benton and Marion counties and their wives, as well as a number of way passengers. The canal and locks at Oregon City were reached at 10 o'clock and passed through with ease and safety in [illegible] minutes. The boat reached Portland at 11 [illegible] A. M., when it was decided to lie over until the next morning. The trip thus far was very enjoyable, except that the air was occasionally felt damp, and the prevalence of a northwest wind made it rather cold. There were, however, occasional hours of sunshine, particularly so as Oregon City was reached, and while passing through the locks. As very few of the passengers had seen the locks before, they were the object of deep interest to such and the admiration of all. The Willamette falls appeared in all their wild grandeur and were perhaps never seen to more advantage. These were new and interesting sights to many of the excursionists that suggested beautiful and touching remarks from young and old and brought up many old associations to a number of the pioneers on board.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE LOCKS.

Many of the farmers for the first time saw the value of these locks. They were the subject not only of admiration but the occasion of earnest discussion and valuable suggestions. The farmers saw in these locks the emancipation of the Willamette valley, the opening of the markets of the world to the products of their farms, honorable competition in the carrying trade, cheap transportation and direct shipments of wheat from their farms and warehouses to tide water without any intermediate handling. "From the Willamette valley to Astoria" seemed to be the inspiration of the hour and the future motto of the farmers of this garden valley of Oregon.

The question was occasionally asked by many: How is the Willamette river to be made navigable all the year? The question was soon answered. According to the opinion of a distinguished engineer on board the judicious expenditure of $40,000 would accomplish this most desirable object—make the river navigable from Eugene to Portland at all seasons of the year. "Instead of depending,"—said a leading farmer—"on paltry Government grants and the sham efforts of subsidized Congressmen and corrupt Senators, there are 8,000 farmers in the Willamette Valley that will subscribe $5 each and that will accomplish the work in less than two years." This answer, in the form of a suggestion, met with a hearty response from those present and indicated that the noble spirit of self reliance is rising in the breasts of the farmers of the State, and is so far a guarantee that the future of Oregon is full of hope and that a new era has dawned on the minds of the people. Some imagine that the farmers of Oregon are indolent, but the facts now being developed are evidences that with a clear stage, no favor and fair remuneration for their labor, they will compare favorably with any other class of men in this State.

Shortly after the boat arrived at Portland heavy showers prevailed during the remainder of the day. A large number of the passengers went ashore and enjoyed themselves or attended to some business, according to their tastes and wants.

THE START FROM PORTLAND FOR ASTORIA

Was made, according to appointment, at 5 o'clock Wednesday morning. Astoria was reached at 11:30 A. M., making the 110 miles in six hours and a half—more than sixteen miles an hour. Besides the 160 passengers and crew, there were 200 tons of wheat on board. The morning was clear and bright, but rather cool to be fully enjoyed, and continued so nearly all the way to Astoria.

PORTLAND AS SEEN FROM THE RIVER.

There is probably no town on the Pacific coast, for its size, that appears to more advantage to visitors than Portland. Its numerous large warehouses, stores, public buildings and private residences, its crescent hills in the rear and the shipping in front are seen to advantage from the river, and make a favorable impression on the minds of strangers.

Notwithstanding that the day was rather cold, there was no want of entertainment among the passengers. Mr. Samuel Adair, an intelligent young gentleman residing at Astoria, was on board from Portland. He took pains to explain to the passengers all the leading points on the river. Col. Jos. Teal of Portland, Mr. Samuel Cooper, Mr. Wheeler of Albany, Senator Hoyt of Roseburg and many others kept the company in the best of good humor by their sallies of wit. The ladies had numerous games in their saloon. One of the great attractions of the occasion and a never failing source of enjoyment, was the presence of

THE ALBANY BRASS BAND.

On the arrival and departure of the boat to and from all the points of any importance on the Willamette and Columbia rivers the band played and the people were delighted. At numerous intervals the band performed some of their choicest pieces for the entertainment of the passengers, which were highly appreciated and called for numerous expressions of satisfaction.

THE RECEPTION AT ASTORIA.

As soon as Tongue Point was reached and Astoria came in view the excitement among the passengers became intensified. For one or more hours previous to arriving at Astoria the sun came out with its cheering rays which had a happy effect. As the Willamette Chief was coming into the wharf a salute of guns was fired from the shore. As soon as the boat was moored the splendid British ship Aliquis fired a salute also. This ship and the ship Alden Besse—the former loading wheat for Europe and the latter loading lumber for China—were crowded with flags from stem to stern and from deck to topmast. The public buildings had hoisted similar signals of welcome. The moment the boat was fastened alongside the Company's wharf the Committee of Arrangements, consisting of Col. Taylor, Messrs. W. P. Gray, C. H. Page, J. W. Welch, Samuel Adair and H. Q. A. Bowlby, came on board and shook hands most cordially with Col. Teal and many of the gentlemen of the excursion party and gave them a hearty welcome to Astoria. Arrangements were made for a public meeting at 7 o'clock and a ball and supper at 9. The senior portion of the visitors took to the town to see the sights and the young people went to boating in the bay. On shore the atmosphere was delightful and continued so during the remaining two days, while a gentle breeze on the bay made boating, sailing and [illegible] most enjoyable.

At 5 o'clock a considerable number of the excursionists partook of a fine dinner on board the Willamette Chief, while the others enjoyed a sumptuous dinner at the Occident, kept by Mr. S. N. Arrigoni. This hotel does much credit to the proprietor in all its arrangements and is a great attraction and a source of comfort to visitors.

THE [illegible] MEETING.

At 7 o'clock the leading citizens of Astoria, the principal members of the excursion and a large number of ladies assembled in the Masonic Hall [illegible]. During the time the meeting was gathering and at appropriate intervals during the meeting the Albany Band discoursed excellent music. When the meeting was called to order there were at least [illegible] persons present; the hall was [illegible] and every [illegible] the [illegible] was influential and took a deep interest in the proceedings. Col. Taylor was called to the Chair and after stating the object of the meeting introduced to the audience [illegible] in the following terms:

[illegible]

Who was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] He [illegible] the most important ever held in Astoria. He came there [illegible] the Willamette Transportation company, of which he was a member. [illegible] Our Company has built the canal and locks at the Willamette Falls at an expense of [illegible],000, have opened the navigation of the Willamette river, have thereby emancipated the farmers of the valley from the iron grasp of railroad monopolists and given the farmers all the advantages of competition between railroad and river transportation. "Man makes railroads, but God made the rivers." Twenty years since I paid $[illegible] a ton from Corvallis to Portland—a distance of 90 miles. To-day our Company transports all kinds of farm produce from the same points for $[illegible] a ton. During the coming fall we expect to ship wheat from Corvallis to Astoria—200 miles for about the same rate—$1 per ton. We have accomplished for the farmers their two first great necessities—the opening of the navigation of the Willamette river and the reduction of the transportation of their productions to reasonable rates.

Our third and grand project for the farmers of the Willamette valley in particular and for Oregon generally is bringing as much of the wheat of the State as possible to Astoria, where the largest merchant ships of the world can anchor with safety and come alongside our wharf, find deep water at all periods of the tide, load a vessel of 2,000 tons of wheat in a week, and send her to sea in a fortnight from the time of her arrival, thereby saving at least a month's time to the owners, avoiding unnecessary expenses of towage and pilotage, bringing the freight rates down to the level of San Francisco at the least and putting from fifteen to twenty cents per bushel additional in the pockets of the farmer. This grand work is inaugurated. Messrs. [illegible] & Son loaded here lately the British ship Lee [illegible] with 1,600 tons of wheat and flour. Messrs. Hewett Wilson & Co. are loading at our wharf the British ship Aliquis with 1,900 tons wheat for Europe. The former was loaded in seven days and the latter will be loaded in two weeks. These shipments from their dispatch and economy have given and are giving the utmost satisfaction to the captains and officers and will be so immensely to the owners when they know the facts of the case. Shipowners will soon hear of the great revolution that our Company is putting into successful operation. They will send their ships where cargoes of the best of wheat and flour can be had without delay, where the bay is large, anchorage safe, expenses light and dispatch prompt. The terrors of the Columbia bar will pass away as a dream of the night and Oregon emancipated from the indifference, errors and selfishness of the past will stand out boldly on its merits, no longer a mere tributary to San Francisco but the joy of her people and an example to other States and Territories in everything that constitutes an intelligent, industrious and enterprising people. This day the farmers of the Willamette valley and the people of Astoria shake hands, the former because of their emancipation from the grasp of the narrow minded and selfish, and the latter because of their hopeful growth and progress.

We now own the Willamette Chief, the Governor Grover, the Beaver and the Shoshone that carry a united freight of 800 tons and can handle 7,000 tons of wheat a month. We propose building a barge for the fall trade that will carry 1,000 tons, so that we will be able to bring an ordinary ship load of wheat from near the head of navigation on the Willamette river to Astoria at one trip. By this means alone we will be able to load the largest vessel that comes to the Pacific coast at two trips, which can be accomplished inside a week. By this simple and efficient means there will be a great saving of the present unavoidable waste caused by so much handling, immense economy of time and expense to shipowners and a large additional profit to the farmers. This is not taking into account the incalculable advantages to all parties of having a large supply of wheat in the different warehouses here from which vessels can be loaded on arrival and put to sea without loss of time. You have now a fair sample of the ways and means by which our company intend to benefit the farmers of Oregon, and you the people of Astoria what we want from you is your hearty support and co-operation in carrying out our plans.

This is a mere synopsis of Col. Teal's speech. The sentiments he expressed were received with bursts of applause, and his flashes of wit, that sparkled all through his speech, kept his audience in the best of good humor.

The Rev. Mr. Hyland of Astoria was introduced to the meeting and made an address of welcome to the friends composing the excursion. The address was expressed in excellent spirit and delivered with much force and feeling.

Mr. Mercer, editor of the Albany [illegible], and Mr. Ireland, editor of the Astorian, in response to calls from the audience made short, appropriate and telling speeches that were well received.

Three hearty cheers were given for our visitors, the Willamette Transportation Co., Col. Teal, the Albany Band and the Willamette Chief.

Shortly after 9 o'clock the meeting adjourned to another hall where the merry dance was enjoyed by 200 people till an early hour this morning. An excellent supper was provided for the guests at 12 o'clock.

THE EXCURSION TO FORT STEVENS AND CAPE DISAPPOINTMENT.

The bright and cheering sunshine of this morning and the gentle breeze on the bay gave assurance of a day's enjoyment to the visitors. The Committee of Arrangements secured the steamer Varuna and the schooner Induna to convey the excursion party to these two leading points on the bay. The day was fine, no one was sick, to all the visitors it was a new scene of rich enjoyment and unalloyed pleasure. At Fort Stevens they were received with a salute from the fort; the men were called to the guns and a shell fired into the bay; the fort was thrown open, all possible attentions were shown by the officers in charge, and they finally left with the hearty cheers of officers and soldiers.

At Cape Disappointment the same attentions were paid to the visitors. The fort and light house were opened to them and nothing left undone to make the friends feel at home and enjoy the sights, which they did to their hearts' content.

The party returned in time to get on board the Willamette Chief, which was to leave on the home trip at 4 P. M.

THE HOME TRIP.

The steamer Willamette Chief, according to announcement, left the wharf a few minutes after 4 P. M. amidst the cheers of the people, the firing of salutes from the land and the ships in the bay. By arrangement the steamer called at the Upper Astoria fishery, the passengers landed and were shown through the establishment and witnessed the process of dressing and canning salmon from the beginning to the end. After enjoying this interesting sight and growing industry, the steamer left for Portland amidst the cheers of the employes of the fishery and the gratification of the visitors.

On leaving Astoria, at the fishery and at all the leading points on the bay, the band played numerous pieces of music which were responded to by the people on shore by waving of handkerchiefs and loud cheers. Immediately after leaving the fishery the young men commenced a series of amusements that for fun, frolic, good humor and enjoyment were never surpassed on the Columbia river by an excursion party, ending with the merry dance in which the ladies participated. And thus closes one of the most important meetings held in Astoria for many years and one of the most successful and happy excursion parties that ever visited the Columbia river. [illegible] It will afford pleasant thoughts and agreeable recollections to all who participated in the excursion.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 2, 1874.

THE SARTORIS-GRANT WEDDING.

THE PRESENTS TO THE BRIDE.

After the congratulations were over, the company, to the sound of music, proceeded to the library, in the second story of the Mansion, where, on a series of tables, were displayed the elegant presents to the bride, the names of the donors being attached to all the articles. Among the most costly gifts was a desert set of eighty-four silver pieces, by Geo. W. Childs, and a complete silver dinner service, by A. J. Drexel, of Philadelphia, the combined value of them being probably $4,500. Secretary Fish gave a large silver tankard; General and Mrs. Sharp, of New York, a ring with a stone cameo set with diamonds; Postmaster-General Creswell, a very handsome ice cream service; ex-Senator Cattell, a diamond ring of five stones. L. H. Morton, of New York, an emerald and diamond ring. These two rings are probably worth $1,000 each. Secretary Robeson gave a toilet set, the pieces of brass elaborately finished, and of the style of Louis XIV.; N. T. Hart, New York, one of the largest sized lace handkerchiefs, such as sell for $500; Gen. Babcock, an elegant Valenciennes lace fan, with a smoked pearl frame, with a monogram of the bride in gold.

Mr. Sartoris presented to his wife a large collection of flowers.

The present of the father of the bride is $10,000.

All the immediate members of the President's family give handsome presents.

The presents were arranged and classified by George A. Brainford (of the house of Bailey & Co., of Philadelphia, who came hither for that express purpose), and will be sent to New York by express and placed on board of the vessel on which Mr. and Mrs. Sartoris have taken passage for England, to depart on Saturday.

A silver card-case and portemonnaie, from Denver, of native ore, and manufactured in that city. The workmanship is very fine. A pair of moonstone earrings, both handsome and curious; several superb point lace handkerchiefs, a flounce of Valenciennes lace, two point lace fans, a Venetian antique mirror with carved frame of highly burnished brass with monogram at the top. This is for a toilette table. Two antique candlesticks to match, with a candle in each. Flowers are painted on the candles. There were several handsome gold necklaces and many lockets. A superb bracelet of wrought gold; an innumerable number of silver punch-bowls, ladles, salt-cellars and spoons; glove boxes of fine gilt and carved wood.

THE TROUSSEAU.

A lady gives the following description of the bride's trousseau: "It is magnificent and almost beyond description. There are silks of every hue and color. Each gaslight silk dress is made with two waists—one decolete and the other high. There are shawls from India, laces direct from the manufactory at Brussels, parasols with superb ivory handles, muslin dresses with French-worked flowers, others with puff and lace inserting. There are gauzes, grenadines, and hats for every costume, slippers for each evening dress, and the lingerie is so fine and dainty that the sight of it brings delight to every feminine heart that rejoices in delicate embroidery, soft lace and fine needlework. Nothing has been overlooked or forgotten that could contribute to the comfort and happiness of this highly-favored girl."

THE BREAKFAST.

The company partook of the wedding breakfast, of which the elegantly prepared bill of fare was printed on white satin. The bill stated that the breakfast was from the President and Mrs. Grant, in compliment to Mr. and Mrs. Sartoris.

All the bridesmaids were presented with handsome bouquets.

Little boxes, lined with white silk, containing wedding cake, were brought away by the guests.

Down the center of the table was a bed of flowers interspersed with small white and colored flags; upon these, at both ends of the table, were the words, "Success to the President." On another, "Success to the Supreme Court," and the others, "Success to the Army and Navy." Not one was dedicated to the young couple who were this day made one. The table was bordered all round with flowers, and the menu, printed on white satin and tied with white ribbon, was laid on each plate.

THE MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE.

The certificate of the marriage of Nellie Grant is engrossed upon parchment, in connection with five other documents. On the upper left-hand corner of the sheet is a copy of the license, written in a plain, bold hand, and empowers any minister of the Gospel to marry Algerton Sartoris to Nellie Grant. Below this is the clergyman's certificate that he has married them. On the upper right hand corner the clerk of the court certifies that he gave the license. Below this the judge of the court identifies the clerk. Still lower the Chief Justice identifies the judge, and last, the Secretary of State certifies to the existence and official character of the Chief Justice. Thus, in all, there are not less than six certificates engrossed upon the sheet. This document was rendered necessary by the law of primogeniture of England, and will be deposited in the archives of the court in the parish in which the happy couple reside. They had determined to live in this country, but the death of Sartoris' elder brother and the consequent entailment of a large property, renders his presence across the water necessary.

Mysteries and Scandals of Convent Life.—The following is a special telegram to the Chicago Times, dated Montreal, May 29: The mysterious disappearance of a girl from the Roman Catholic convent in Toronto is creating no little excitement in that city. The girl had been allowed to go out to see her friends, and had then reported scenes which she had witnessed there, much to the scandal of the occupants of the institution. This is said to account for her disappearance. Her mother lives in Cleveland, O., but had not sent for her to come home. She and another girl stated that they saw immoral conduct between a priest and a nun in October last, and she was then cautioned to say nothing about it. Several of the girls of the convent have stated that priests frequently take liberties with girls, by putting their arms around them, kissing and fondling them; but nothing is known of any positive immorality since what was seen in October. The detectives are using every means to find the missing girl.

A Scandal.—We find the following item of scandal news in the Cincinnati Commercial of a recent date:

There is a very ugly story going the rounds of the press to the effect that at the wedding of Miss Stewart the refreshments gave out. The facts are these: Toward the close of the evening there was such rioting—for it can be called by no other name—in the supper room, such drinking, such breakage of fine glass—goblets and dishes being pitched under the table by the guests to get rid of the labor of holding them, that Mrs. Stewart ordered the supper room to be closed. Just such scenes transpired at the last ball given by Corcoran, in honor of the debut of his daughter, and they have been repeated in this city to a greater or less degree at every large entertainment given since.

A wonderful story with regard to General Sherman's contemplated change of residence to St. Louis is creating considerable excitement among the weak-nerved in the city. It is to the effect that, as Sherman is a favorite in the West, where there is a strong element who wish to see him made President, he is to move to St. Louis in order to strengthen the movement, and this is done with the consent and by the advice of Grant; that if Sherman is elected President, Grant is to be made once more General of the Army, etc., etc. All the foregoing is from the Washington artist of the Chicago Tribune.

Illness of Senator Ferry.—A New York dispatch, of May 16th, says: "A Hartford dispatch says that Senator Ferry, of Connecticut, is very ill with a spinal difficulty, and will probably never be able to regain his seat in the Senate. Senator Sumner suffered from the same disease, and the last time he was in the Senate, the day before his death, he had a chat with Ferry on the subject."

Charleston, S. C., May 18.—The grand jury of Orange county to-day indicted Gov. Moses for breach of trust and grand larceny, with fraudulent intent. The indictment charges Moses with having counseled and advised Humbert, the defaulting County Treasurer, to use $5,000 of the State taxes to pay his (Moses') private debts. The County Solicitor declares his purpose to prosecute the case vigorously.

Dispatches from the East state a fact which surprises no one, that the House had rejected the Senate currency bill, but it shows that but little expectation can now be reasonably entertained that Congress will do anything on the question this session. Had the country known this all the time, matters would have been in a better condition to-day. Before the President's veto, it was claimed that the South and West were the strongholds of inflation. The St Louis Republican says by a constant and persistent reiteration of the statement that inflation was peculiarly in the interest, and to the advantage of the West and South, the shrewd manipulators of that movement contrived to delude a majority of the Congressional Representatives from these portions of the country into a support of their deceptive project. By dint of brazen impudence, and skillful management they succeeded in preserving the delusion until the accomplishment of their designs had been well nigh achieved. The veto, however, has pierced the bubble, and even people who were favorably inclined to inflation have learned, and how little their feelings were enlisted in that cause.

Grain and Provision Reports.
